The Challenge of Finding an Exceptional Investment Advisory Provider

A prudent, fiduciary-oriented approach to investment management – one that carefully balances capital preservation and growth with risk, performance, and cost – is critical to the success of a nonprofit organization and to the continued fulfillment of its mission. Many nonprofit organizations entrust this important responsibility to outside providers, employing financial advisors, investment advisory firms, and consultants in the management of their assets.

However, finding the right investment advisory provider can be challenging. Among the thousands of financial advisors and firms in the United States, only a small percentage have the experience, knowledge, and capabilities required to meet the complex and unique needs of large nonprofit organizations. Combined with the opaque, sales-centered nature of the investment management industry, separating these exceptional professionals from their less capable counterparts can be difficult.
